Dear Mr. Houston,

Your last letter to me disclaimed any responsibility for my and my wife's (two invalids) ACTUAL money loss through the indefensible actions, not mentioning the landgrab of our very valuable property, of one of your employees, who never would have been considered by us but for appearing as a trusted person by the CIA.

Neither one of us can afford the loss that would occur through your repudiation. We will not choose the very costly and questionable legal action that you suggested. The cruelty to us and the shameless, bold grab, that not even a Canaris would have dared to undertake, should not go unpunished and a very important Agency should be restored to the place it was intended to occupy.

The records, my work and our life in all its scope is open for all to see.

I am, sincerely,

Titus de Bobula
